Premise:

Frostmount Village is a place where witches reside. Abigale loses her parents only to join a new family as she realizes that there is a plot that threatens the entire community that she loves.

Historical Background:

In 1692 to 1693 there were witch trials in colonial Massachusetts where people that they believed were witches got burned at the stake. That gave time for the real witches and their protectors to get away. That is when Mary Snowspell and her dragon protector would build a town called Frostmount Village. After saving every witch that she could they put a magic barrier around the town that no one would find it unless they had magic in their blood.

There was an old prophecy that when the descent of Mary Snowspell and Richard Frostmount came together that something would shift in the world. One day in 1708 a drifter stumbled upon the Village. The only way that could have happened was if there was magic in his blood. They brought him in and feed him. Before he went on his way he went to Mary. Richard didn't like it, but Mary assured him that it was okay.

He told her, "In 1998, on a rainy night, Sarah & Steve Johnson will get attacked. They will leave behind a daughter at the age of three. Richard's descendant will be her protector. Their fates will be intertwined. They will be the key to the safety of the world. Make sure you keep this story alive so when the time comes they will be ready." Mary was confused but the drifter refused to say more. He wouldn't even tell them his name.

When he left Mary took days to write the story into a journal that would be passed down from generation to generation. Also, in this book she told the story of what happened to make the town get built. The magic spell was added so generations will keep the town safe from forces that want to destroy witches and erase them from history.

Story Excerpt:

Walter Frostmount Jr.

I'm standing at my post when I see someone walking towards the town. "In position. We have a visitor. Ring the bell," I ordered.

My best friend and Partner on watch duty waved his arms. A second later "Ding, Ding, Dong." Sounded in the distance. All the adults put the children in their houses and the rest got in defensive positions.

"I come in peace," the man said as he got closer.

"That's close enough," my best friend orders. "I'm going to check him out."

"Wait," a voice said. Turning backwards I look for who said that.

"What are you doing here?" my father asked.

"I was just walking past when I felt the magic. I just wanted to know where it came from," he answered. It sounded like the truth, but I wasn't sure. "I only need shelter for the night, and I will be gone by morning. I watch as my mother walks towards the guy and my father walks closely behind her. She has gifts that no other witches have so I know she is safe.

"May I?" she asks. His head moves up and down. My mother puts her hands on him and closes her eyes. My father stands at her back ready to attack if needed. "He is telling the truth."

"This way. We will feed you and get you some clean clothes but then you have to be on your way. We do not know you, so we have to protect ourselves," my father says.

"I only need a few hours," he answers as he follows my mother to an empty cabin. My father assigns two people to watch then leaves him to find them later. I go back to my post.

Abigale Johnson

When the guy drifted in it scared me. I didn't know what to expect. "Where are you going?" my best friend asked.

“I just need some air. I will be by the lake,” I answer as I walk away. When I get to the lake twenty minutes later I sit at the edge. I don’t know how long I sat there before I heard a noise. Looking over my shoulder I don’t see anything or anyone.

“May I join you?” the man asked.

“Where did you come from?” I asked.

“You looked right at me. Are you okay?” he asks. I move away from him, and he stands there watching me. “You’re more beautiful than I thought you would be. Your mother was beautiful like you.”

“You knew my mother.”

“Very well. I watched her take her last breath.” My heart speeds up and my hands start to shake. Sparks come from my hand.

“You killed my mother?” I grated.

“I would have killed you too if it hadn’t been for the spell she cast. It hid you from all dark magic. You know you should have bonded with him. You would have been able to beat me,” he said.

Lightning crackles from my hands, sizzling as it comes out. My heart races and my body heats up. Standing with my arms to my side, face crunched up in a frown. “WHO ARE YOU!!” I asked. Before I can do anything a dark cloud forms in the sky right above me. I never take my eyes off of him as my hair blows wildly around my face. The dark cloud surrounds me as I walk towards the man who killed my parents. The light from my hands begins to dim. The cloud closes in on me until I am choking on it. Gripping my throat with my hands I struggle to breathe. Everything goes black.
